Chart comments updated on Friday's close

Whoa Boy; Reigning in the Galloping Gold Price

I have previously said that the signal for the end of a bull market - in anything - is often a blowout movement upwards that has everyone saying “can you believe it?” Have we just seen that in the gold market last week? Before we answer that, we need to remind you that we have not been in a normal commodity price cycle with gold. It is all about a structural change in the bullion market and normal rules do not apply.

A week ago the bullion price was at US$4,980/oz, poised to punch through US$5,000/oz. It did so in style, rising to circa US$5,600 in a matter of days, a rise of 10% almost overnight. By the end of the week it had given back all of the gains, falling by more than 10% at one point on Friday. Stop loss orders would have been going off like a gatling gun, especially from ETFs. That looked like a blowout but it needs to be put into context.

Last week our gold equities acted in disbelief with many of them falling just when the gold price was surging. While that was counterintuitive, it was reality. It was almost as if the communal thinking was saying “whoa boy, this is going too far. This is unsustainable”. In this instance the equity market movements were anticipating, or leading the gold price down.

So, is it game over? Personally, I think it is great to have a pause and let the dust settle for a bit. There is nothing to complain about in terms of implied profitability for gold producers with the price of US$3,000-US$4,000/oz, prices much lower than today's spot price. However, I am not saying the price will fall back to these lower levels.

What has changed in the big picture in a week? Nothing really. With Trump in office the chaos will continue. We have just seen over-zealous speculators get carried away and the enthusiasm has been reignited in, appropriately, for the time being. Next week? Who knows. Movements like this are sent to test our resolve and there will be selling by some, but there has been no fundamental shift in the thematic. Silver also took a pounding, falling 26% in last night's trading. We need to take this in our stride.

Uranium running, and rare earth reacting lower

While all the focus has been on precious metals recently, do not forget uranium. Look at how those stocks have surged. That is all about energy, not the gold price. Everything in the uranium sector, from companies to the commodity, have been powering higher in their own specialist world.

In contrast, the heat has come out of the rare earth sector as we try and figure out what the US is actually saying on this front. Greenland is out of the cross hairs for the time being and there seems to be some backtracking on pricing of the rare earths in any government supported future. It is a moving feast.

But sentiment peaked and will now turn down

Over the last week or two we have been cautioning that the market was at, or approaching, a short term peak at which time you should pull money out of the market. There were similarities with a short term peak in October/November that was followed by a weaker market for a few months. Well, we have now started the pullback phase. The falls in the precious metals prices virtually guarantee this will happen and we will see a moderation of the short term euphoria.

INDABA and 121 Coming Up

I'm heading off to Capetown next week so I may not have time to do Weeklies. I certainly won't be updating charts for a couple of weeks as I don't travel with my chart book, but if there are any interesting stories I will try and cover them.

Sentiment Oscillator: Sentiment softened a touch last week and the Oscillator is still forming a double top. It is hard to see sentiment improving next week, what with the gold and silver moves on Friday night. Those movements almost guarantee that the market will go into a correction phase for at least a few weeks, or at least while thinks about what it wants to do next. There were 68% (71%) of shares under coverage in uptrend, and 11% (10%) in downtrend.

Guides to Chart Interpretations

- Charts usually go pass from one trend (up or down) into the other via a period of indecision and uncertainty during which the trend can either recover or change. This period is signified by the orange colour. The orange represent both the greatest risk and greatest reward possibilities.
- Once a chart is in confirmed up or downtrends it is not uncommon for 10-20% of that trend to have already transpired.
- There are trends within trends. The focus of this chart review is the immediate trend that affects the sentiment i.e. it can be a downtrend within a long-term uptrend.
- Not every chart warrants a new comment every week. The new comments are in bold type. Grey type comments may be dated.
- Individual charts provide a single view. It is valuable to look at charts of other companies in similar commodities, and the overall sentiment is also very valuable. Not many stocks can swim against the tide.
- We periodically add or delete charts, some times for obscure reasons. If a chart consistent gives poor signals or is very erratic, we may delete it. Sometimes we add a chart because we want to see what all the fuss is about. We do have a preference for charting stocks that we cover in our research as well.
- Errors and omissions may occur from time to time, especially in fast moving markets.

Amber Lights in Tables: Just a reminder if when the amber light is used in the table – it is when the charts are ambiguous or when there is a change of trend taking place. If a chart is breaching a downtrend it can either be a positive sign or a trap. Only once it has done more work can it be confirmed as a new uptrend. Maybe it is a new uptrend (or conversely a new downtrend); the risk takers can decide to jump on board early (or sell). They will maximise their profits (or minimise their losses if indeed it is the start of the new uptrend (downtrend). More risk-averse investors should wait a little longer, being prepared to give up some of the gains in return for greater certainty.
